Aldinga formed as a town in the 1850's in response to the development of farming on the Aldinga Plains. Growing quickly, the original layout of the town is attributed to local farmer of the time, Lewis Fidge.

By the 1870's the town had established it's own hotel, church, blacksmith's shop and a number of other shops andd trades.

Aldinga today

Located on the east coast of the Fleurieu Peninsula, Aldinga is a relaxed beachside town south of Adelaide which attracts tourists and holidaymakers, particularly on weekends and during the summer months.

The nearby beach is known by locals for its beauty and accessibility which is suitable for beach walking, swimming, scuba diving and snorkelling.

The enclosed map will help discover the historic sites and access current services within Aldinga's township.
